The house that doubled in size and other clever transformations

UNIQUELY YOURS

With a growing reputation for its personalised approach, interior design company Celine Estates provides a service that combines flair, integrity and professionalism for truly original results

For a while now, luxury design enterprise Celine Estates has been quietly building a name for itself for the immaculate residential interiors it creates for high-profile clients based in London, UK-wide and internationally. Opulent and elegant, their interiors can justifiably be called luxurious, but ‘luxury’ also describes Celine Estates’ approach to service: its clients are not only looking for a beautiful end product, but also impeccable service.

‘We differentiate ourselves by the fact that we offer a luxury service as well as luxury design,’ says Noor Charchafchi, Celine Estates’ vivacious and personable director. ‘Without service, design will always be flawed as there will be an inability to execute.’ She continues, ‘Our approach – melding service and design capabilities – enables us to produce homes that are beautiful, technologically progressive and functional but with individuality at their core.’

In practice, this translates into a dedicated team of professionals with whom clients can build lasting relationships. Each member of staff at Celine Estates is multilingual and has dual professional skills – such as architects turned designers or joiners, or lawyers turned designers – as in the case of Noor herself. This richness of expertise results in a multi-disciplined approach to projects, with everything from architecture to planning issues, legal and contractual negotiations to exclusive technology and original design schemes and soft furnishings on hand for the client.

The results of Celine Estates’ integrated way of working are there for all to see: exceptional interiors that achieve each client’s ambitions for his or her living space. Such commitment to client satisfaction is what has put Celine Estates on the lips of London’s design community. With its growing reputation and elegant new office in Chelsea Harbour’s design hub, expect to receive a recommendation for Celine Estates soon – if you haven’t already □
